And oh, when the night lamps are burning.
And atorus growing wild.
My heart for thee ever is yearning,
My beautiful child! Come back to my bosom, my darling,

To banish my tours.

And rainbows of peace shall such over
The shadows of years. Come back from thy flower strewn pillow,

To nestle once more
Within the fond arms that have held thou
So closely of yore! Such radiant hopes at thy coming Arose to my sight, I saw not the seal on thy ferchead For Mansions of Light!

I heard not the hymn of the angels So sweet to thine ear, Still covering thy face with soft hisses, I knew not a tear!

Thou wilt not return, Baby Lona, A speciess white Hily thou bloemest Today in the sky! I turn from the dust of the valley

In silence away, To see a bright face that will hallow Each swift year's decay. A beckening hand in the beavous. A smile on the shore, When crowned with delight I shall clasp thee
